Know your profile
before you invest

Did you know that the way you approach investments is directly linked to the dominant aspects of your personality? Once you are aware of how your major personality attributes affect your financial decisions, you will be more capable of taking charge objectively when you are next faced with an investment decision.

Are you a people person? If you love being around others, if you'd rather be at a party than at home on the couch, then you fit this profile.

You are likely to have a higher risk tolerance, which gives you the opportunity to see higher returns.

However, you might take too many risks and end up losing a lot of money.

Are you responsible and organised? If you always do all your chores before relaxing, if you go the extra mile at work, then this is likely to be you.

You have the ability to be patient and to think long term.

Note that you might need to invest less cautiously every now and then, even if it makes you uncomfortable.

Do you worry a lot? If you experience high levels of stress and often feel like you're stuck in a depressing situation that you can't change, this might be you.

You often make decisions based on your emotions, which is dangerous in terms of investments.

Always get a second, expert opinion before making an investment choice.

Are you an optimist? If you're easy-going and you see the best in every person and every situation, this is probably you.

You don't mind taking advice from others who are experts in their fields.

Be careful: sometimes you are too tactful to tell people that you don't agree with their plans, even if you are very doubtful. So find an advisor you trust and are comfortable enough to be honest with.

Hopefully, by being aware of your weaker traits as well as your stronger features, you will learn to avoid making any regrettable financial choices.
